

Update From Carol King Open Air Campaigners

June 2018

April began with a three-day conference called, INSPIRE: The Church in the 21st Century. I was selected to serve as a facilitator for the discussion that followed Miroslav Volf's talk entitled The Future of the Theological Conversation. The discussion included how social location impacts one's priorities in talking about theology and examined what theological ideas are too often neglected.

SUMMER MINISTRY

I have finally confirmed my summer plans. I will be working in Boston with our OAC Field Director and another missionary from New York. The first week of June, I will be helping with our annual sketchboard evangelism training seminar (SET). The following weeks, we will have various teams coming through for training in evangelism. We combine classroom training with on-the-job training. We have classes in the mornings and evangelism on the streets of downtown Boston in the late morning to early afternoon. In the late afternoon, we partner with local inner-city churches to do children's ministry in the local parks. The evenings are reserved for prepping for the following day. I will be living at a rented house in Dorchester and will also serve as hostess for the teams.

I have spent some time working in Boston in years past, and it is a great place for summer ministry.
